

THREE BEAUTIES APPEAL THE JUDGMENT OF PARIS.

Norma Whalley.

Constantine Tyler.

Eleanore R. Roth.

CHICAGO PRIEST TO RUN FOR CONGRESS

Father Heldmann Picked as Representative Lorimer's Successor.

Chicago, Ill., June 22.—Father G. D. Heldmann, pastor of St. Paul's Church, West Twenty-first place and Roby street, probably will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress from the Second Congressional District to succeed William Lorimer, the present Representative.

Father Heldmann has not announced his candidacy, but his political friends think he will do so within two weeks. The only reason he has not previously done so, his followers assert, is because he lacks the consent of Archbishop Feehan. If he imposes no serious objections Father Heldmann will place himself in the hands of his adherents, and the work of organizing will then proceed.

"Personally I am not averse to entering actively into the game of politics in the Second District," said the priest to a reporter to-day. "Not that my ambition runs that way. I have imagined that if I were in Congress I could do more for my people in this district than has been accomplished for them in the past. There is much dissatisfaction on this way over Mr. Lorimer."

All classes have been represented in appealing to me to become a candidate—Republicans and Democrats alike. Of course, I will do nothing of the kind unless the archbishop should give his unqualified consent. My life is consecrated to the cause of the Church. Still, it may be that I can run without my parish duties being materially interfered with.

"I don't believe in the college of silver at the rate of 16 to 1. Otherwise the Chicago platform meets my views, and I am satisfied that I could harmonize the Harrison and Altdorf factions."

CITY EMPLOYEES SEEK TO ORGANIZE.

Meet to Form a Mutual Benefit and Protective Organization.

Eighty-six men employed by the city of New York, or the counties included therein, met in the Borough Hall, Brooklyn, last night, and took steps to organize themselves into a mutual benefit and protective association.

James Bryce, of the Chamberlain's office, president, and John Treaskis, of the Register of Arrivals' office, acted as secretary. John Daily, captain of the general scheme, said the policemen, firemen and letter carriers had a perfect organization, and suggested that the other civil employees could gain advantages by similar organization.

A committee of seven to perfect a plan of organization and draw up a suitable constitution will be appointed.

CLARK KIDNAPPING CASE MADE A DRUMMER INSANE.

He Says Mrs. Barrow Stole His Five-Year-Old Boy, for Whom He Is Looking.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 22.—A good looking, well dressed man asked the police of this city to-day to help him find his lost five-year-old boy. The man, who says his name is Thomas Orniston, a travelling man for Gable & Co., of Philadelphia, is demented.

He says that his boy was stolen by Mrs. Barrow, the woman in the Marion Clark case. His mental trouble seems the result of his interest in the Barrow trial. He was dust covered and foot sore and said he had walked all the way from New York to this city searching for his baby along the road; he says his wife is stopping with a friend named Charles O'Neill, at No. 112 West One Hundred and First street, New York.

Killed a Wild Goose: Fined $20.75.

Winsted, Conn., June 22.—Galen B. Humphrey, a rich lumberman, living in Riverton, was arrested to-day on the charge of violating the State Game law by shooting a wild goose. He was fined $7 and costs, amounting to $20.75, which he paid.

Mrs. Maybrick to Be Free.

The inside history of this remarkable miscarriage of justice will be found in next Sunday's Journal.

NAVY RING IS STILL AFTER SCHLEY.

Another Inquiry Ordered, but Considered as Sure to Fail.

Washington, June 22.—A court of inquiry has been determined upon to investigate the contradictory statement of Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson in reference to Rear Admiral Schley, as stated in this morning's Journal.

The official promulgation of the order will be made shortly after the return of Secretary Long to Washington. The purpose of the inquiry is specifically to investigate Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson's statement, but it will necessarily precipitate an investigation into the conversation alleged to have taken place at the Brooklyn at the time she made the famous leap.

The inevitable result will be to open up the whole subject and give the Sampson clique their opportunity of besmirching Rear Admiral Schley's record.

Admiral Schley's friends describe it as a conspiracy, and say they will fall if the court be properly conducted, for these reasons:

The record of Admiral Schley cannot be attacked or besmirched after the promotion awarded him for gallantry and irreproachable conduct by the President.

The court must confine itself to the charges and specifications against Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson.

The charge must be based not on what Rear Admiral Schley said, even if he said anything, but upon the variations in Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson's oral and written statements.

Rear Admiral Schley can be made in no way a witness to explain why Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson made divergent statements.

Admiral Schley had already advised Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson that the principal colour was a caution, and in this way placed the whole responsibility of the truth or falsity of this statement on Lieutenant-Commander Hodgson, and on him alone.

SOUTH SOLD FOR BRYAN, SENATOR BATE DECLARES.

He Says the Heart of the Democratic Party Is with the Leader of 1896 and the Chicago Platform.

Fresno, Cal., June 22.—United States Senator W. B. Bate, of Tennessee, in an interview to-day discussed the prospects of William J. Bryan as the standard bearer of the Democratic party in 1900. He said:

"The heart of the Democratic party is with Mr. Bryan and the Chicago platform. The Chicago platform will be reaffirmed and the clause against trusts will be strengthened."

"The united South will stand behind Mr. Bryan and free silver and in opposition to the trusts."

Senator Bate said that only a very small part of the Populists will refrain from co-operating with the Democracy, especially if Mr. Bryan is the leader.

JILTED, HE HANGED HIMSELF IN THE BARN.

When His Promised Wife Saw Loew's Farm She Refused to Wed, and Went Back Home.

Bridgeton, N. J., June 22.—Because his sweetheart didn't like his farm and refused to marry him when she saw it, Charles Loew, of Deerfield Township, hanged himself in his haymow to-day.

He was thirty-four years old, prosperous and contented, and was engaged to a Philadelphia girl of means. The wedding day was set. She came, looked at the farm, and, shrugging her shoulders, said: "I suppose I don't want to live in the country, anyway."

Then the engagement was broken off and she returned to town, while her rejected lover went and killed himself.

A dispatch was sent to her telling the result of her objection to living in the country.

Fair Contestants for the Laurels of Mlle. Jeanne Dortzal. Miss Norma Whalley, the English Actress; Miss Constantine Tyler, the American Model, and Miss Eleanore Roth, a New York Girl, Offered and Accepted as Splendid Types of Woman's Loveliness.

HERE, as you see, the seeds of the apple of discord are sown, and already come to harvest. On one hand America protests, on the other England raises her voice. Thus, two types are displayed, neither conventional, perhaps, yet either would be a fair reason to set aside the egotistical verdict of the French.

As John La Farge concisely and consistently showed yesterday in the Journal one type of beauty cannot satisfy the world. "The most beautiful woman in the world," as he says, "is a Samoan at Apia, a Japanese at Tokio, a Hawaiian at Honolulu, a descendant of the French or Spanish colonizer on one side of Canal street in New Orleans, and of a German or British colonizer on the other side of Canal street, a Northerner in the North, a Southerner in the South."

Thus, as you see, beauty is as illimitable as the bounds of the wide, wide world. What may please in New York may despise in Oahu; what Nippon may worship Berlin would ignore. And so on, as you will. At one side of the world the standard of beauty is no more the same than it is at the other than are the manners and customs of the two peoples with all the earth between.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

Today, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection. A fair and a half ago Miss Whalley came here with George Edwards' "In Town." She was rated then as a beautiful woman. But no one looked forward to her beauty. To-day, as she appears in New York, many have noted this, and the impression of all is that Miss Whalley is a woman of rare perfection.

Now, here, for instance, is Miss Norma Whalley. Like Mlle. Jeanne, she is an actress. But while Mlle. Jeanne is French, Miss Whalley is English. She is beautiful; you cannot discredit that. Perhaps you will think that she seems more American in type than British, but that is not to be considered in this appeal from the French. The one idea is to find out not whether the world's beauty is French, English, American, Irish, Hawaiian, Japanese, but to discover, instead, just who she is.

It is impossible to give color, and, to a large extent, to delineate character. But, however great be these charms of the French woman, they cannot surpass those of Miss Whalley. In fact, these perhaps are her greatest charms.

ESQUIMAUX CHILD HAS A SLIGHT COLD.

Aitmarhoke's Sister Coughs, but Is Free from Consumption.

Zackariner, nine years of age, twin sister of Aitmarhoke, who died of phthisis in Mount Vernon a fortnight ago, is in St. Luke's Hospital; but she is not ill. If she were not a little Esquimaux girl, a little enigma to physicians, a treasure to the scientific students of races, she might be playing in the Park at noon every day.

She has a cold, and she coughs. There is no sign of phthisis. The chart at her white iron cot in the girls' ward of St. Luke's is that of a little person who is well.

To a visitor she said yesterday: "I like this better than Mount Vernon. Here there are no mosquitoes. I do not feel warm. When it is warm I keep quiet. I do not run in the room with the little girls. They are very good."

Zackariner talks in that English, textually. Her accent is not foreign. She has lost the Alaskan way of dropping the eyelids and raising the eyebrows to say yes. She says "Yes, sir," or "Yes, madam."

She has learned conventionalities. Every one likes her at St. Luke's. She said to her visitor yesterday: "I have no doll. I would like to have a baby doll with long clothes. Tell your wife to make one pink gown, then to give me the piece, the thread and the needles for a blue gown. I want to sew that one myself."

"I would like also to learn how to darn. Oh, I know how to sew! One little girl here has a little wool lamb that says 'Baa' when you pull a string. I would like to have a baby doll with blond hair. I don't like black hair like mine. I am sorry I am not white, and I don't want to go back to Alaska."

There was a pretty, enchanting tone of resignation in her voice. She had not the least suspicion that every one was under a moral obligation to make her happy. It is so tedious to an Esquimaux to be taken out of Alaska. She does not know that she is a scientific curiosity. Her charming little mind has the impression that every one loves her for herself.

DIME NOVEL READER'S NOVEL FORM OF SUICIDE.

Fifteen-Year-Old Philadelphia Boy Calmly Strangled Himself to Death.

Philadelphia, June 22.—George Van Robe, aged fifteen years, committed suicide in a remarkable manner to-day. He visited a friend's house, and, going to the cellar, arranged a rope across a beam.

One end of this he fastened to his right foot and the other end he tied around his neck. Then, placing a flour bag over his head, he strangled himself to death. It is said that the boy was a reader of cheap, sensational literature.

WAGES INCREASED TEN CENTS A DAY.

Pennsylvania Furnace Men Notified of a Second Advance in Pay Within Ten Weeks.

Mauch Chunk, Pa., June 22.—The two hundred furnace men and laborers employed at the Carbon Iron & Steel Company's plant at Parryville, have been notified that, beginning July 1, their wages will be increased 10 cents per day.

VANDERBILT HOME FOR A WEEK OR SO.

Arrives with Friends on His Yacht, and Will Go to Newport.

William K. Vanderbilt arrived in the city yesterday on board his steam yacht Valiant, which had been out from Southampton nine days and sixteen hours. With Mr. Vanderbilt on the yacht were three guests, William F. Hoyt, F. C. Lawrence and Paul De Courcy.

The Valiant arrived at Quarentine Wednesday night, as told in yesterday's Journal, and the yacht steamed up to the foot of Forty-second street, North River, early yesterday, and was met by the New York Central tug T. C. Clark.

Mr. Vanderbilt said that his plans for the immediate future were unsettled.

To a visitor she said yesterday: "I like this better than Mount Vernon. Here there are no mosquitoes. I do not feel warm. When it is warm I keep quiet. I do not run in the room with the little girls. They are very good."

Zackariner talks in that English, textually. Her accent is not foreign. She has lost the Alaskan way of dropping the eyelids and raising the eyebrows to say yes. She says "Yes, sir," or "Yes, madam."

She has learned conventionalities. Every one likes her at St. Luke's. She said to her visitor yesterday: "I have no doll. I would like to have a baby doll with long clothes. Tell your wife to make one pink gown, then to give me the piece, the thread and the needles for a blue gown. I want to sew that one myself."

"I would like also to learn how to darn. Oh, I know how to sew! One little girl here has a little wool lamb that says 'Baa' when you pull a string. I would like to have a baby doll with blond hair. I don't like black hair like mine. I am sorry I am not white, and I don't want to go back to Alaska."

There was a pretty, enchanting tone of resignation in her voice. She had not the least suspicion that every one was under a moral obligation to make her happy. It is so tedious to an Esquimaux to be taken out of Alaska. She does not know that she is a scientific curiosity. Her charming little mind has the impression that every one loves her for herself.

DIME NOVEL READER'S NOVEL FORM OF SUICIDE.

Fifteen-Year-Old Philadelphia Boy Calmly Strangled Himself to Death.

Philadelphia, June 22.—George Van Robe, aged fifteen years, committed suicide in a remarkable manner to-day. He visited a friend's house, and, going to the cellar, arranged a rope across a beam.

One end of this he fastened to his right foot and the other end he tied around his neck. Then, placing a flour bag over his head, he strangled himself to death. It is said that the boy was a reader of cheap, sensational literature.

WAGES INCREASED TEN CENTS A DAY.

Pennsylvania Furnace Men Notified of a Second Advance in Pay Within Ten Weeks.

Your Outing Dress

for seaside, lake or mountain.

English Gray Trousers with fancy stripes, $4.50 to $7.50.

White Duck Trousers, $1.50.

White Linen Duck Trousers, $4.00.

Knickerbockers of fancy plaid and check chevrons, $3.50 to $8.00. Of linen crash and white duck, $2.50 each.

Blue Serge Reefers (un-lined), $6.50 and $7.50.

Blue Serge Sacks (un-lined), $5.50.

Outing Hats and Caps of every shape.

Outing Furnishings of every kind.

Hackett, Carhart & Co.

Broadway, Cor. 13th St., Cor. Canal St., Near Chambers.

Kennedy

12 CORTLANDT ST.

STRAW HATS.

A great collection. Prices surprisingly small.

Rough Sailors, 95c., $1.20, $1.65 and $1.90.

Split Straw Sailors (fine braid), 95c. to $2.40.

Soft Mackinaw, 95c. to $1.65.

About this time take a drink of Hires ROOT BEER. THE CHARLES E. HIRSH COMPANY, Philadelphia, MAKERS OF HIRE'S ROOT BEER.

Detective William F. Maher, of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street station, who was connected with the West One Hundredth street station at the time of the death of Louis Zimmerman, has made a report to Acting-Inspector Kane. He says he investigated at the time and found death was accidental.

BUTTERFIELD HAS NOT BEEN FOUND.

Mrs. Samuel Butterfield is firmly convinced her husband was not drowned in the surf at Coney Island on Sunday last, and that he is alive. She says that she does not know his present whereabouts, and she cannot suggest any reason for his mysterious disappearance.

"I am sure that my husband is alive," she said yesterday, "because the friend who brought the message from him to me told me that he had seen him before he went to Coney Island, and after he returned from there. I do not know where he got the clothes which he seems to have worn after leaving in the bath house those which he had on him when he went there. I suppose he will return in due time and explain all this mystery."

At the request of the police of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street station, James Butterfield went to Rye yesterday to view the body of a man which had been washed up on the Sonnet beach. It was not that of his brother Samuel.

James Butterfield informed the police that he is convinced that his brother is alive. Another brother, John, has paid a note for $50 which was held against the missing man at the Twelfth Ward Bank, where he was employed.

STOLE A BABY, AND WILL KEEP IT, TOO.

Singer Kidnapped His Brother About to Be Taken Abroad.

Harry Singer, who abducted his own brother, told such a pathetic story in the Essex Market Police Court yesterday about why he did so that Magistrate Denel said he could keep him.

There were seven Singer children. The father died nine months ago, and three months afterward the mother followed him to the grave. The older children worked for their living and the babies were sent to institutions.

Four-year-old Samuel Singer was adopted by a man named Jay Gould, of No. 21 Hester street, Harry, aged eighteen, and another grown brother, who is a telegraph operator, lived at No. 185 Thirteenth street, where they maintained two of the children. They visited the other three from time to time, and gave them little luxuries, but could not afford to do very much for them. The Goulds, who have no children of their own, grew very fond of Sammy. Recently they made arrangements to go to England, and they said they would take the little fellow with them.

Harry loved his brother, and didn't want to lose him forever. On Wednesday he saw him playing in front of the Gould house, and could not resist the temptation to carry him off and hide him in his room.

When Mr. Gould missed the child he made a great commotion and went to the Delancey street police station and entered a charge of abduction against Henry Spencer, who was arrested and taken to the police station.

"I love my little brother and I didn't want to see him carried off to England and never see him again," he young boy declared in court. He cried as he said it, and little Sammy blubbered in sympathy and clung to him.

"I don't want to go to England," said Sammy, "want to stay in America with me. I don't want to go to England." "Don't let that Gould man take him. It's bad enough to have two of the family in hospitals and places without having Sammy carried off to England."

"I don't want to go to England," said Sammy, "want to stay in America with me. I don't want to go to England." "Don't let that Gould man take him. It's bad enough to have two of the family in hospitals and places without having Sammy carried off to England."

"I don't want to go to England," said Sammy, "want to stay in America with me